Dear Colleague,

I am writing to refer a young lady who has presented with a frontal headache persisting for the last two to three months. The headache is exacerbated by coughing and sneezing, and it is particularly worse when she leans forward.

The patient is generally fit and well, but she has a history of renal hypertension. For this condition, she is currently taking the following medications: • Amlodipine 5 milligram daily • Mesoprolol 2.5 milligram daily • Rimepryl 10 milligram daily

It is important to note that she has an allergy to PENICILLIN.

On physical examination, her vital signs were as follows: temperature 36.2°C, oxygen saturation 98%, blood pressure 124/77 mmHg, and pulse rate 72 bpm. Examination of her sinuses revealed slight tenderness, particularly in the frontal region, while the remainder of the ENT examination was unremarkable.

I would greatly appreciate your assistance in further evaluating this patient.

Yours sincerely,
